Giving Kitchen provides financial assistance to food service workers facing injury, illness, death of an immediate family member or a housing disaster. These vital funds cover the costs of housing expenses (typically rent or mortgage and utility payments) and are paid directly to the vendor (i.e. landlord, bank or utility provider). Because Giving Kitchen focuses on housing stability, we have prevented an estimated $17 million in excess costs by preventing eviction and disconnection of utility services and we've prevented over 6,100 food service workers and their children from experiencing eviction and potentially homelessness. Clients work with a remote multi-lingual call center supported by case managers with social work experience to complete an application and submit appropriate and relevant documentation. Funds are distributed to food service workers in crisis based based on a clearly defined and transparent process. To support food service workers who speak English as a second language, Giving Kitchen works with RTT Mobile to provide translation services, instantly, to support 188 languages from around the world.
